Sub 3 Hour Marathon Training Plan

Build towards sub-3:00 with 6 running days a week, progressive endurance and a complete 18-week race-date schedule.

GOAL

Sub 3:00

Race rhythm: 4:13/km / 6:47/mile.

DURATION

18 weeks

A complete build ending on race day.

TRAINING WEEK

6 runs

Frequency reduces in race week.

PEAK MILEAGE

60 miles / 96.6 km

Longest run: up to 21 miles / 33.8 km.

IS THIS PLAN RIGHT FOR YOU?

Already running consistently around 36 miles / 57.9 km a week, comfortable with 10 miles / 16.1 km in one run, and able to sustain 6 running days. A recent half marathon around 1:21 is a useful speed indicator, but does not guarantee this marathon target.

Paces and session guide

RACE THRESHOLD

4:16/km / 6:52/mile

Rounded average for exactly 3:00:00 over 42.195 km.

RACE PACE

4:13/km / 6:47/mile

An even average gives about 2:57:55. A modest margin, not permission to start too fast.

EASY AND LONG RUNS

Conversational effort

Use current fitness and effort, rather than forcing an easy pace from your target. Slow down for heat, hills and fatigue.

CONTROLLED TEMPO

Comfortably hard, never all-out

Set effort from current fitness. Recover with easy jogging; the total prescribed distance includes the full session.

Build your endurance

This is a 6-day running week with an explicit mileage progression.

Easy and medium runs

Most running stays conversational. Medium runs build aerobic support; avoid adding unplanned intensity.

Long runs

Build towards up to 21 miles / 33.8 km, subject to a practical time cap around three hours. Shortening a long run reduces that week's mileage. Never run faster to fit the distance in.

Recovery and strength

Monday is a rest day. Friday is a gentle recovery run, which can be dropped if recovery suffers. Put familiar strength work after an easy run and reduce it during the taper.

Practise your race

A marathon-pace long run replaces the midweek quality session that week.

Marathon rhythm

Use 4:13/km / 6:47/mile for the specified sections only. Warm-ups, recoveries and cool-downs are included in the daily total.

Fuelling rehearsal

Practise breakfast, drinks and regular fuel during long runs. Check carbohydrate per serving and test the actual products available at your race. Race day is not the time to try something new.

Taper and pacing

Reduce volume over the final three weeks. Start the race controlled, check official course markers and adjust for conditions. A small pace margin does not mean banking time early.

How to use this plan

1. Count back 18 weeks from your Sunday marathon. This is a complete build, not a short block to repeat.
2. Start only when the 36 miles / 57.9 km weekly base and 10 miles / 16.1 km long run are comfortable. Recent race speed alone is not enough.
3. 6 weekly running days are prescribed in the build. All warm-ups, recoveries and cool-downs count within the listed distance.
4. Move days while keeping recovery before quality sessions and the long run. Never squeeze missed sessions together.
5. Practise fuel and drinks early, shorten sessions when recovery suffers and adjust your race target if marathon pace is becoming a hard effort.
6. After a missed week, return at a manageable earlier load. After a longer interruption, reassess the target and race date. Stop if pain worsens or changes your stride.
